I. Introduction. This chapter is intended to serve as a reference regarding the Fourth Amendment issues that arise in connection with traffic stops. It begins by addressing officers’ conduct before a stop, proceeds to discuss making the stop itself, then considers investigation during traffic stops, and finally covers the termination of traffic stops.<sup>1</sup>

II. Before the Stop.

A. “Running Tags.” Sometimes, an officer will decide to “run” a vehicle’s “tag” – that is, run a computer check to determine whether the license plate on the vehicle is current and matches the vehicle, and perhaps whether the vehicle is registered to a person with outstanding warrants or who is not permitted to drive. When this is done randomly, without individualized suspicion, defendants sometimes argue that the officer has conducted an illegal search by running the tag. Courts have uniformly rejected this argument, finding that license plates are open to public view. See, e.g., State v. Chambers, 203 N.C. App. 373, *2 (2010) (unpublished) (“Defendant’s license tag was displayed, as required by North Carolina law, on the back of his vehicle for all of society to view. Therefore, defendant did not have a subjective or objective reasonable expectation of privacy in his license tag. As such, the officer’s actions did not constitute a search under the Fourth Amendment.”); Jones v. Town of Woodworth, 132 So.3d 422, 424-25 (La. Ct. App. 2013) (“[A] survey of federal and state cases addressing this issue have concluded that a license plate is an object which is constantly exposed to public view and in which a person, thus, has no reasonable expectation of privacy, and that consequently, conducting a random license plate check is legal.”); State v. Setinich, 822 N.W.2d 9, 12 (Minn. Ct. App. 2012) (rejecting a defendant’s challenge to an officer’s suspicionless license plate check because “[a] driver does not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in a license plate number which is required to be openly displayed”); State v. Davis, 239 P.3d 1002, 1006 (Or. Ct. App. 2010) (upholding a random license check and stating that “[t]he state can access a person’s driving records by observing a driver’s registration plate that is displayed in plain view and looking up that registration plate number in the state’s own records”), aff’d by an equally divided court, 295 P.3d 617 (2013); State v. Donis, 723 A.2d 35, 40 (N.J. 1998) (holding that there is no reasonable expectation of privacy in the exterior of a vehicle, including the license plate, so an officer’s ability to run a tag “should not be limited only to those instances when [the officer] actually witness[es] a violation of motor vehicle laws”). Cf. New York v. Class, 475 U.S. 106, 114 (1986) (finding no reasonable expectation of privacy in a vehicle’s VIN number because “it is unreasonable to have an expectation of privacy in an object required by law to be located in a place ordinarily in plain view from the exterior of the automobile”). See also Section III.D.9 (discussion under heading “Driver’s Identity” and cases cited therein).

III. Making the Stop.

A. Legal Standard. “Reasonable suspicion [is] the necessary standard for stops based on traffic violations.” State v. Styles, 362 N.C. 412 (2008) (rejecting the argument that full probable cause is required for stops based on readily observable traffic violations). That is the same standard that applies to investigative stops in connection with more serious offenses. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968).

An officer may have reasonable suspicion of a traffic violation if a law is “genuinely ambiguous,” and the officer reasonably interprets it to prohibit conduct that the officer has observed, even if the officer’s interpretation of the law turns out to be mistaken. Heien v. North Carolina, ___ U.S. ___, ___, 135 S. Ct. 530, 541 (2014) (Kagan, J., concurring). In Heien, an officer stopped a motorist for having one burned-out brake light. The court of appeals ruled that the applicable statute required only one working brake light and that the stop was therefore unreasonable. The Supreme Court reviewed the case and ruled that the brake light statute was sufficiently difficult to parse that the officer’s interpretation was reasonable even if mistaken, rendering the stop reasonable also. The majority opinion does not set forth a standard for when an officer’s mistaken interpretation of law is reasonable, but Justice Kagan’s concurrence argues that such an interpretation is reasonable only when the law itself is “genuinely ambiguous.”

B. Pretextual Stops. If an officer has reasonable suspicion that a driver has committed a crime or an infraction, the officer may stop the driver’s vehicle. This is so even if the officer is not interested in pursuing the crime or infraction for which reasonable suspicion exists, but rather is hoping to observe or gather evidence of another offense. Whren v. United States, 517 U.S. 806, 813 (1996) (emphasizing that the “[s]ubjective intentions” of the officer are irrelevant); State

v. McClendon, 350 N.C. 630, 635-36 (1999) (adopting Whren under the state constitution).<sup>2</sup> However, if an officer makes a pretextual traffic stop and then engages in investigative activity that is directed not at the traffic offense but at another offense for which reasonable suspicion is absent, the officer may exceed the permitted scope of the traffic stop. This issue is addressed below, in Section IV of this Chapter entitled Investigation During the Stop.

Because the officer's subjective intentions regarding the purpose of the stop are immaterial, whether "an officer conducting a traffic stop [did or] did not subsequently issue a citation is also irrelevant to the validity of the stop." State v. Parker, 183 N.C. App. 1, 8 (2007).

- C. When Reasonable Suspicion Must Exist. Normally, a law enforcement officer will attempt to develop reasonable suspicion before instructing a motorist to stop. But what if the officer does not have reasonable suspicion at that point, yet develops reasonable suspicion prior to the person's compliance with the officer's instruction? In California v. Hodari D., 499 U.S. 621, 629 (1991), the United States Supreme Court held that a show of authority is not a seizure until the subject complies. Because the propriety of a seizure depends on the facts known at the time of the seizure, it appears that events after an officer's show of authority, but before a driver's submission to it, may be used to justify the stop. For example, an officer who activates his blue lights after observing a driver traveling 45 m.p.h. in a 55 m.p.h. zone may be without reasonable suspicion. But if the driver initially ignores the blue lights, continues driving, and weaves severely before stopping, the seizure may be upheld based on the driver's weaving in addition to his slow rate of speed. State v. Atwater, ___ N.C. App. ___, 723 S.E.2d 582, *2 (2012) (unpublished) (adopting the foregoing analysis and concluding that "[r]egardless of whether [the officer] had a reasonable suspicion that defendant was involved in criminal activity prior to turning on his blue lights, defendant's subsequent actions [erratic driving and running two stop signs] gave [the officer] reasonable suspicion to stop defendant for traffic violations"); United States v. Swindle, 407 F.3d 562, 569 (2d Cir. 2005) (reluctantly concluding that a court may "consider[] events that occur[] after [a driver is] ordered to pull over" but before he complies in determining the constitutionality of a seizure); United States v. Smith, 217 F.3d 746, 750 (9th Cir. 2000) (relying on Hodari D. to reject the argument that "only the factors present up to the point when [the officer] turned on the lights of his patrol car can be considered in analyzing the validity of the stop"). Cf. United States v. McCauley, 548 F.3d 440, 443 (6th Cir. 2008) ("We determine whether reasonable suspicion existed at the point of seizure – not . . . at the point of attempted seizure."); United States v. Johnson, 212 F.3d 1313 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (similar). Cf. generally 4 WAYNE R. LAFAVE, SEARCH AND SEIZURE

<sup>2</sup> Indeed, a stop may be legally justified even where the officer is completely unaware of the offense for which reasonable suspicion exists and makes the stop based entirely on the officer's incorrect belief that reasonable suspicion exists for another offense. See, e.g., Devenpeck v. Alford, 543 U.S. 146, 153 (2004) ("[A]n arresting officer's state of mind (except for the facts that he knows) is irrelevant to the existence of probable cause. That is to say, his subjective reason for making the arrest need not be the criminal offense as to which the known facts provide probable cause." (internal citations omitted)); State v. Osterhoudt, 222 N.C. App. 620, 632 (2012) (an officer stopped the defendant based on the officer's mistaken belief that the defendant's driving violated a particular traffic law; the court of appeals concluded that the law in question had no application to the defendant's driving, but upheld the stop because the facts observed by the officer provided reasonable suspicion that the defendant's driving violated a different traffic law, notwithstanding the fact that the officer did not act on that basis).

§ 9.4(d) n.198 (5th ed. 2012) (collecting cases) [hereinafter LAFAVE, SEARCH AND SEIZURE].

D. Common Issues.

1. Speeding. Many traffic stops based on speeding are supported by radar or other technological means. However, an officer's visual estimate of a vehicle's speed generally is also sufficient to support a traffic stop for speeding. State v. Barnhill, 166 N.C. App. 228, 232 (2004) (upholding a traffic stop based on the estimate of an officer who had no special training that the defendant was speeding 40 m.p.h. in a 25 m.p.h. zone, and stating that "it is well established in this State, that any person of ordinary intelligence, who had a reasonable opportunity to observe a vehicle in motion and judge its speed may testify as to his estimation of the speed of that vehicle"). However, if a vehicle is speeding only slightly, an officer's visual estimate of speed may be insufficiently reliable and accurate to support a traffic stop. Compare United States v. Sowards, 690 F.3d 583, 585-86 (4th Cir. 2012) (officer's visual estimate that the defendant was speeding 75 m.p.h. in a 70 m.p.h. zone was insufficient to support a traffic stop; the officer also expressed some difficulty with units of measurement), with United States v. Mubdi, 691 F.3d 334, 341 (4th Cir. 2012) (traffic stop was justified when two officers independently estimated that the defendant was speeding between 63 m.p.h. and 65 m.p.h. in a 55 m.p.h. zone), vacated on other grounds, ___ U.S. ___, 133 S. Ct. 2851 (2013).
2. Driving Slowly. Driving substantially under the posted speed limit is not itself necessarily unlawful. In fact, it is sometimes required by G.S. 20-141(a), which states that "[n]o person shall drive a vehicle on a highway or in a public vehicular area at a speed greater than is reasonable and prudent under the conditions then existing." On the other hand, in some circumstances, driving slowly may constitute obstruction of traffic under G.S. 20-141(h) ("No person shall operate a motor vehicle on the highway at such a slow speed as to impede the normal and reasonable movement of traffic . . ."), or may violate posted minimum speed limits under G.S. 20-141(c) (unlawful to operate passenger vehicle at less than certain minimum speeds indicated by appropriate signs). Furthermore, the fact that a driver is proceeding unusually slowly may contribute to reasonable suspicion that the driver is impaired. See, e.g., State v. Bonds, 139 N.C. App. 627, 628-29 (2000) (driver's blank look, slow speed, and the fact that he had his window down in cold weather provided reasonable suspicion; opinion quotes NHTSA publication regarding the connection between slow speeds, blank looks, and DWI); State v. Aubin, 100 N.C. App. 628, 632 (1990) (fact that defendant slowed to 45 m.p.h. on I-95 and weaved within his lane supported reasonable suspicion of DWI); State v. Jones, 96 N.C. App. 389, 395 (1989) (although the defendant did not commit a traffic infraction, "his driving 20 miles per hour below the speed limit and weaving within his lane were actions sufficient to raise a suspicion of an impaired driver in a reasonable and experienced [officer's] mind").

Whether slow speed alone is sufficient to provide reasonable suspicion of impairment is not completely settled in North Carolina. The state supreme court seemed to suggest that it might be in State v. Styles, 362 N.C. 412, 427 (2008) (“For instance, law enforcement may observe certain facts that would, in the totality of the circumstances, lead a reasonable officer to believe a driver is impaired, such as weaving within the lane of travel or driving significantly slower than the speed limit.”), but the court of appeals stated that it is not in a subsequent unpublished decision, State v. Brown, 207 N.C. App. 377, *2 (2010) (unpublished) (stating that traveling 10 m.p.h. below the speed limit is not alone enough to create reasonable suspicion, but finding reasonable suspicion based on speed, weaving, and the late hour). The weight of authority in other states is that it is not. See, e.g., State v. Bacher, 867 N.E.2d 864, 867-68 (Ohio Ct. App. 2007) (holding that “slow travel alone [in that case, 23 m.p.h. below the speed limit on the highway] does not create a reasonable suspicion,” and collecting cases from across the country).

It is also unclear just how slowly a driver must be travelling in order to raise suspicions. Of course, driving a few miles per hour under the posted limit is not suspicious. State v. Canty, 224 N.C. App. 514, 520 (2012) (fact that vehicle slowed to 59 m.p.h. in a 65 m.p.h. zone upon seeing officers did not provide reasonable suspicion). Ten miles per hour under the limit, however, may be enough to contribute to suspicion. Brown, 207 N.C. App. at *2 (finding reasonable suspicion where defendant was driving 10 m.p.h. under the speed limit and weaving within a lane); State v. Bradshaw, 198 N.C. App. 703, *2 (2009) (unpublished) (late hour, driving 10 m.p.h. below the limit, and abrupt turns provided reasonable suspicion). Certainly, the more sustained and the more pronounced the slow driving, the greater the suspicion.

3. Weaving. G.S. 20-146 requires that “[a] vehicle shall be driven as nearly as practicable entirely within a single lane and shall not be moved from such lane until the driver has first ascertained that such movement can be made with safety.”
  - a. Across Lanes. Absent exceptional circumstances, weaving across lanes of traffic generally violates this provision and supports a traffic stop. See, e.g., State v. Osterhoudt, 222 N.C. App. 620, 629 (2012) (where the “defendant crossed [a] double yellow line . . . he failed to stay in his lane and violated” G.S. 20-146); State v. Hudson, 206 N.C. App. 482, 486 (2010) (where the defendant “crossed the center line of I-95 and pulled back over the fog line twice,” an officer was justified in stopping him for a violation of G.S. 20-146). See also State v. Kochuk, 366 N.C. 549 (2013) (per curiam) (adopting the analysis of the dissenting opinion in the court of appeals where it was explained that a driver “momentarily crossed the right dotted line once while in the middle lane” and “later drove on the fog line twice”; the opinion cites Hudson, and appears to suggest that a stop was justified under G.S. 20-146; however, the opinion focuses primarily on the presence of reasonable suspicion of impaired driving as a basis for the stop); State v. Simmons, 205 N.C. App. 509, 525 (2010) (without discussing G.S. 20-146, the court ruled that a stop was supported by reasonable suspicion of DWI where the defendant “was not only weaving within his lane, but was also weaving across and outside the lanes of travel, and at one point actually ran off the road”). But cf. State v. Derbyshire, ___ N.C. App. ___, 745 S.E.2d 886, 893 (2013) (holding that a stop was not supported by reasonable suspicion of DWI because it was based on only “one instance of weaving,” even though “the right side of Defendant’s tires crossed into the right-hand lane” during the weaving; the court did not address G.S. 20-146 as a possible basis for the stop).

Driving so that one’s tires touch, but do not cross, a lane line should be treated as weaving within a lane, not weaving across lanes. Shea Denning, Keeping It Between the Lines, N.C. CRIM. L. BLOG (Mar. 11, 2015), <http://nccriminallaw.sog.unc.edu/keeping-it-between-the-lines/> (discussing this point and citing State v. Peele, 196 N.C. App. 668 (2009), where the court ruled that there was no reasonable suspicion to stop a defendant whose tires touched the lane lines twice; although the court’s discussion focuses on the presence or absence of reasonable suspicion of DWI and does not cite G.S. 20-146, the court does characterize the defendant’s driving as weaving “within” a lane).

b. Within a Lane. Weaving within a single lane does not violate G.S. 20-146 and so is not itself a crime or an infraction. In some circumstances, however, weaving within a single lane may provide, or contribute to, reasonable suspicion that a driver is impaired or is driving carelessly.

i. Moderate Weaving Within a Lane: Weaving Plus. In State v. Fields, 195 N.C. App. 740, 741 (2009), the court of appeals held that an officer did not have reasonable suspicion that a driver was impaired where the driver “swerve[d] to the white line on the right side of the traffic lane” three times over a mile and a half. However, the court stated that weaving, “coupled with additional . . . facts,” may provide reasonable suspicion. The court cited cases involving additional facts such as driving “significantly below the speed limit,” driving at an unusually late hour, and driving in the proximity of drinking establishments. Thus, Fields stands for the proposition that moderate weaving within a single lane does not provide reasonable suspicion, but that ‘weaving plus’ may do so. Fields has been applied in cases such as State v. Wainwright, ___ N.C. App. ___, 770 S.E.2d 99, 105-06 (2015) (mistakenly analyzing weaving across a lane line as if it were weaving within a lane, then finding reasonable suspicion of impaired driving based in part on the weaving and in part on the late hour and the proximity to bars); State v. Kochuk, 366 N.C. 549 (2013) (ruling that reasonable suspicion supported a stop where the defendant was weaving and it was 1:10 a.m.); State v. Derbyshire, ___ N.C. App. ___, 745 S.E.2d 886, 893 (2013) (holding that weaving alone did not provide reasonable suspicion to support a stop, that driving at 10:05 p.m. on a Wednesday is “utterly ordinary” and insufficient to render weaving suspicious, and that having “very bright”

- headlights also was not suspicious); and State v. Peele, 196 N.C. App. 668, 669 (2009) (finding no reasonable suspicion of DWI where an officer received an anonymous tip that defendant was “possibl[y]” driving while impaired, then saw the defendant “weave within his lane once”).
- ii. Severe Weaving Within a Lane. While moderate weaving within a single lane is insufficient by itself to support a traffic stop, severe weaving may suffice. In State v. Fields, 219 N.C. App. 385, 389 (2012), the court of appeals upheld a traffic stop conducted by an officer who followed the defendant for three quarters of a mile and saw him “weaving in his own lane . . . sufficiently frequent[ly] and erratic[ly] to prompt evasive maneuvers from other drivers.” The officer compared the defendant’s vehicle to a “ball bouncing in a small room.” The extensive weaving enabled the court of appeals to distinguish the precedents discussed in the preceding paragraph. See also State v. Otto, 366 N.C. 134, 138 (2012) (traffic stop justified by the defendant’s “constant and continual” weaving at 11:00 p.m. on a Friday night).
4. Sitting at a Stoplight. Like weaving within a single lane, remaining at a stoplight after the light turns green is not, in itself, a violation of the law. But also like weaving, it may provide or contribute to reasonable suspicion that the driver is impaired.<sup>3</sup> An important factor in such cases is the length of the delay. Compare State v. Barnard, 362 N.C. 244, 245 (2008) (determining that reasonable suspicion supported an officer’s decision to stop the defendant where the defendant was waiting at a traffic light in a high-crime area, near several bars, at 12:15 a.m., and “[w]hen the light turned green, defendant remained stopped for approximately thirty seconds” before proceeding), with State v. Roberson, 163 N.C. App. 129, 134 (2004) (finding no reasonable suspicion where the defendant sat at a green light at 4:30 a.m., near several bars, for 8 to 10 seconds, and stating that “[a] motorist waiting at a traffic light can have her attention diverted for any number of reasons. . . . [so] a time lapse of eight to ten seconds does not appear so unusual as to give rise to suspicion justifying a stop”).
5. Unsafe Movement/Lack of Turn Signal. Under G.S. 20-154(a), “before starting, stopping or turning from a direct line[, a driver] shall first see that such movement can be made in safety . . . and whenever the operation of any other vehicle may be affected by such movement, shall give a signal as required.” Litigation under this statute has focused on the phrase “the operation of any other vehicle may be affected.” Generally, the appellate courts have held that a driver need not signal when making a mandatory turn, but must if the turn is optional and there is another vehicle following closely. Compare State v. Ivey, 360 N.C. 562, 565 (2006) (the defendant was not required to signal at what amounted to a right-turn-only intersection; a right turn was the “only legal movement he could make,” and the vehicle behind him was likewise required to stop, then turn right, so the defendant’s turn did not affect the trailing vehicle), and State v.

<sup>3</sup> Under some circumstances, it might also constitute obstructing traffic in violation of G.S. 20-141(h).

Watkins, 220 N.C. App. 384, 390 (2012) (suggesting that there was insufficient evidence of unsafe movement where the defendant changed lanes without signaling while driving three to four car lengths in front of a police vehicle on a road with heavy traffic, because it was not clear that another vehicle was affected), with State v. Styles, 362 N.C. 412, 417 (2008) (where the defendant changed lanes “immediately in front of” an officer, he violated the statute; “changing lanes immediately in front of another vehicle may affect the operation of the trailing vehicle”), and State v. McRae, 203 N.C. App. 319, 323 (2010) (similar).

6. Late Hour, High-Crime Area. The United States Supreme Court has held that presence in a high-crime area, “standing alone, is not a basis for concluding that [a person is] engaged in criminal conduct.” Brown v. Texas, 443 U.S. 47, 52 (1979). Although the stop in Brown took place at noon, presence in a high-crime area at an unusually late hour is also alone insufficient to provide reasonable suspicion. State v. Murray, 192 N.C. App. 684, 689-90 (2008) (no reasonable suspicion to stop defendant, who was driving in a commercial area with a high incidence of property crimes at 3:41 a.m.). But the incidence of crime in the area and the hour of night are factors that, combined with others such as nervousness or evasive action, may contribute to reasonable suspicion. Cf. In re I.R.T., 184 N.C. App. 579, 585 (2007) (listing factors); State v. Mello, 200 N.C. App. 437, 446-47 (2009) (holding that the defendant’s presence in a high-drug area, coupled with evasive action on the part of individuals seen interacting with defendant, provided reasonable suspicion supporting a stop).
7. Community Caretaking. The court of appeals recognized the community caretaking doctrine as a basis for a vehicle stop in State v. Smathers, ___ N.C. App. ___, 753 S.E.2d 380, 384 (2014). In Smathers, an officer stopped the defendant to make sure that she was OK after her car hit a large animal that ran in front of her. The court ruled that the stop was justified, finding an objectively reasonable basis for the caretaking stop that outweighed the intrusion of the stop on the driver’s privacy. The court set out a flexible test for community caretaking, yet cautioned that the doctrine should be applied narrowly, so its precise scope remains uncertain.
8. Tips. Whether information from a tipster provides reasonable suspicion to stop a vehicle depends on the totality of the circumstances. Whether the tipster is identified is a critical factor, so this chapter treats anonymous tips separately from other tips.
  - a. Anonymous Tips. Historically, information from an anonymous tipster has been viewed as insufficient to support a stop, at least without unusual indicia of reliability, such as very detailed information or meaningful corroboration of the tip by the police. State v. Coleman, ___ N.C. App. ___, 743 S.E.2d 62, 67 (2013) (a tip that the court treated as anonymous did not provide reasonable suspicion, in part because it “did not provide any way for [the investigating officer] to assess [the tipster’s] credibility, failed to explain her basis of knowledge, and did not include any information concerning defendant’s future actions”); State v. Blankenship, ___ N.C. App. ___, 748 S.E.2d 616, 619-20 (2013) (taxi driver’s anonymous call to 911, reporting that a specific red Ford Mustang, headed in a specific direction, was “driving erratically [and] running over traffic cones,” was insufficient to support a stop of a red Mustang located less than two minutes later headed in the described direction; officers did not corroborate the bad driving and the tip had “limited but insufficient indicia of reliability”); State v. Johnson, 204 N.C. App. 259, 263 (2010) (stating that “[c]ourts have repeatedly recognized, as a general rule, the inherent unreliability of anonymous tips standing on their own” unless such a tip “itself possess[es] sufficient indicia of reliability, or [is] corroborated by [an] officer’s investigation or observations”); State v. Peele, 196 N.C. App. 668, 673-74 (2009) (an anonymous tip that the defendant was driving recklessly, combined with an officer’s observation of a single instance of weaving, was insufficient to give rise to reasonable suspicion). This skepticism was rooted in part in Florida v. J.L., 529 U.S. 266, 270 (2000), a non-traffic stop case in which the Court stated that “[u]nlike a tip from a known informant whose reputation can be assessed and who can be held responsible if her allegations turn out to be fabricated . . . an anonymous tip alone seldom demonstrates the informant’s basis of knowledge or veracity,” and so rarely provides reasonable suspicion. Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

However, the Supreme Court recently decided Navarette v. California, 572 U.S. ___, 134 S. Ct. 1683, 1692 (2014), ruling that a motorist’s 911 call, reporting that a specific vehicle had just run the caller off the road, was an anonymous tip that provided reasonable suspicion to stop the described vehicle 15 minutes later. The Court first ruled that the tip was reliable. It reasoned that the caller effectively claimed first-hand knowledge of the other vehicle’s dangerous driving; that the call was “especially reliable” because it was contemporaneous with the dangerous driving; and that the call was made to 911, which “has some features [like recording and caller ID] that allow for identifying and tracing callers, and thus provide some safeguards against making false reports with immunity.” Id. at ___, 134 S. Ct. at 1689-90. Then the Court held that running another vehicle off the road “suggests lane-positioning problems, decreased vigilance, impaired judgment, or some combination of those recognized drunk driving cues,” and so provided reasonable suspicion of DWI. Id. at ___, 134 S. Ct. at 1691. Because the Court found reasonable suspicion based on a garden-variety anonymous 911 call that the officers did little to corroborate, Navarette almost certainly changes the law in North Carolina regarding anonymous tips and reasonable suspicion.<sup>4</sup> However, it is unclear how far Navarette will extend.

<sup>4</sup> North Carolina’s appellate courts could adhere to the previous line of authority by ruling that the North Carolina Constitution provides greater protection than the Fourth Amendment, but that is unlikely given the courts’ repeated statements that the state and federal constitutions provide coextensive protection from unreasonable searches and seizures. See, e.g., State v. Verkerk, __ N.C. App. ___, 747 S.E.2d 658, 670 (2013) (stating that “this Court and the [state] Supreme Court have clearly held that, as far as the substantive protections against unreasonable searches and seizures are concerned, the federal and state

Will it apply when the tip is received through a means other than 911? When it concerns a completed traffic offense rather than an ongoing one like DWI? These issues will need to be decided in future cases.

- b. Other Tips. Where an informant “willingly place[s] her anonymity at risk,” by identifying herself or by speaking to an officer face to face, courts more readily conclude that the information provides reasonable suspicion. State v. Maready, 362 N.C. 614, 619-20 (2008) (court gave significant weight to information provided by a driver who approached officers in person, thereby allowing officers to see her, her vehicle, and her license plate, notwithstanding the fact that the officers did not in fact make note of any identifying information about her). See also State v. Hudgins, 195 N.C. App. 430, 435 (2009) (a driver called the police to report that he was being followed, then complied with the dispatcher’s instructions to go to a specific location to allow an officer to intercept the trailing vehicle; when the officer stopped the second vehicle, the caller also stopped briefly; the defendant, who was driving the second vehicle, was impaired; the stop was proper, in part because “by calling on a cell phone and remaining at the scene, [the] caller placed his anonymity at risk”).<sup>5</sup>
9. Driver’s Identity. “[W]hen a police officer becomes aware that a vehicle being operated is registered to an owner with a suspended or revoked driver’s license, and there is no evidence appearing to the officer that the owner is not the individual driving the automobile, reasonable suspicion exists to warrant an investigatory stop.” State v. Hess, 185 N.C. App. 530, 534 (2007). See also State v. Johnson, 204 N.C. App. 259, 265 (2010) (“[T]he officers did lawfully stop the vehicle after discovering that the registered owner’s driver’s license was suspended.”). Presumably, an officer would also be justified in stopping a vehicle if he determined that the registered owner was the subject of an outstanding arrest warrant or other criminal process and if the officer could not rule out the possibility that the owner of the vehicle was driving.<sup>6</sup> constitutions provide the same rights,” and citing multiple cases holding that the two constitutions are coextensive in this regard), rev’d on other grounds, 367 N.C. 483 (2014).

<sup>5</sup> The Hudgins court emphasized that the caller remained at the scene of the stop, thereby relinquishing his anonymity. By contrast, in State v. Blankenship, ___ N.C. App. ___, 748 S.E.2d 616, 617-18 (2013), a taxi driver called 911 on his cell phone to report an erratic driver. The taxi driver did not give his name, but “when an individual calls 911, the 911 operator can determine the phone number used to make the call. Therefore, the 911 operator was later able to identify the taxicab driver.” Nonetheless, the court treated the call as an anonymous tip because “the officers did not meet [the taxi driver] face-to-face,” and found that the tip failed to provide reasonable suspicion to support a stop of the other driver. See also State v. Coleman, ___ N.C. App. ___, 743 S.E.2d 62, 64 (2013) (treating a telephone tip as anonymous even though “the communications center obtained the caller’s name . . . and phone number”).

<sup>6</sup> In State v. Watkins, 220 N.C. App. 384, 390 (2012), the court of appeals upheld a stop based in part on the fact that the registered owner of a vehicle had outstanding warrants even though the officers involved in the case were “pretty sure” that the driver was not the owner. The court noted that the defendant “was driving a car registered to another person,” that the registered owner had outstanding warrants, and that there was a passenger in the vehicle who could have been the registered owner.

IV. Investigation During the Stop.

- A. Ordering Occupants Out of the Vehicle. In the interest of officer safety, an officer may order any or all of a vehicle's occupants out of the vehicle during a traffic stop. Pennsylvania v. Mimms, 434 U.S. 106, 110-11 (1977) (driver); Maryland v. Wilson, 519 U.S. 408, 414-15 (1997) (passengers). Likewise, an officer may order the vehicle's occupants to remain in the vehicle. State v. Shearin, 170 N.C. App. 222, 230 (2005); ROBERT L. FARB, ARREST, SEARCH, AND INVESTIGATION IN NORTH CAROLINA 45 & n.191 (4th ed. 2011) (collecting cases). Whether, and under what circumstances, an officer can order a driver or passenger into the back seat of the officer's cruiser is an open question in North Carolina and is the subject of a split of authority nationally. Jeff Welty, Traffic Stops, Part II, N.C. CRIM. L. BLOG (October 28, 2009), <http://nccriminallaw.sog.unc.edu/traffic-stops-part-ii/>.
- B. Frisking Occupants. A frisk does not follow automatically from a valid stop. It is justified only if the officer reasonably suspects that the person or people to be frisked are armed and dangerous. Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 27 (1968). For example, a frisk was justified when a driver "had prior convictions for drug offenses, [an officer] observed [the driver's] nervous behavior inside his vehicle, and [the officer] saw him deliberately conceal his right hand and refuse to open it despite repeated requests." State v. Henry, ___ N.C. App. ___, 765 S.E.2d 94, 99 (2014). An officer may frisk a passenger based on reasonable suspicion that the passenger is armed and dangerous, even if the officer does not suspect the passenger of criminal activity. Arizona v. Johnson, 555 U.S. 323, 332 (2009).
- C. "Car Frisks." In Michigan v. Long, 463 U.S. 1032, 1049 (1983), the Supreme Court held that "the search of the passenger compartment of an automobile, limited to those areas in which a weapon may be placed or hidden, is permissible if the police officer possesses [reasonable suspicion] that the suspect is dangerous and the suspect may gain immediate control of weapons." Although Long was decided in the context of what might be described as a Terry stop rather than a traffic stop – because the vehicle in Long had already crashed when officers stopped to investigate – the two types of stops are similar if not identical,<sup>7</sup> and the concept of a car frisk applies with equal force to traffic stops. State v. Hudson, 103 N.C. App. 708, 718-19 (1991) (upholding car frisk arising out of a traffic stop).
- 1. Dangerousness. Whether there is reasonable suspicion that a person is dangerous is similar to the inquiry that must be made in the Terry frisk context. Factors that courts have mentioned in the car frisk context include: furtive movements by the occupants of the vehicle; lack of compliance with police instructions; belligerence; reports that the suspect is armed; and visible indications that a weapon may be present in the car. See, e.g., State v. Edwards, 164 N.C. App. 130, 136-37 (2004) (finding a car frisk justified where a sexual assault suspect was reported to have a gun; was noncompliant; and appeared to have reached under the seat of his vehicle); State v. Minor, 132 N.C. App. 478, 482 (1999) (holding a car frisk not justified where a suspect appeared to access the center console of the vehicle and later rubbed his hand on his thigh near his pocket; these movements were not “clearly furtive”); State v. Clyburn, 120 N.C. App. 377, 381-82 (1995) (ruling a car frisk justified where officers suspected that the defendant was involved in the drug trade and the defendant was belligerent during the stop).

<sup>7</sup> Berkemer v. McCarty, 468 U.S. 420, 439 (1984) ("[T]he usual traffic stop is more analogous to a so-called 'Terry stop' than to a formal arrest." (internal citations omitted)); State v. Styles, 362 N.C. 412, 414 (2008) ("Traffic stops have 'been historically reviewed under the investigatory detention framework first articulated in Terry.'" (citation omitted)).

2. Access to Weapon. Whether an officer’s belief that a suspect may gain immediate control of a weapon is reasonable depends on the particular circumstances of a given traffic stop including the suspect’s location relative to the vehicle and whether the suspect has been handcuffed. Compare Edwards, 164 N.C. App. at 137 (defendant suspected of possessing handgun who was handcuffed and sitting on the curb was in sufficiently “close proximity to the interior of the vehicle” to gain access to a weapon), and State v. Parker, 183 N.C. App. 1, 12 (2007) (defendant was handcuffed in the backseat of his own car when he disclosed that there was a gun in the car; two other passengers were also in the car; “these circumstances were sufficient to create a reasonable belief that defendant was dangerous and had immediate access to a weapon”), with State v. Braxton, 90 N.C. App. 204, 208-09 (1988) (it was “uncontroverted that defendant [stopped for speeding] could not obtain any weapon . . . from the car” where he was not in the car and detective testified that defendant could not have reached the area searched).
3. Scope. As to the proper scope of a car frisk, there is little North Carolina law on point. In Parker, 183 N.C. App. at 11-12, the court held that an officer properly searched “a drawstring bag located underneath a piece of newspaper that fell to the ground” as he assisted an occupant out of the vehicle. The court noted that the bag was located near a firearm and “was at least large enough to contain methamphetamine and a ‘smoking device,’ perhaps suggesting a willingness to err on the side of officer safety when confronted with ambiguous facts.

- D. License, Warrant, and Record Checks. Officers frequently check the validity of a driver’s license, registration, and insurance during a traffic stop, and may also check for any outstanding arrest warrants against the driver. In Rodriguez v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 135 S. Ct. 1609, 1615 (2015), the Supreme Court ruled that “checking the driver’s license, determining whether there are outstanding warrants against the driver, and inspecting the automobile’s registration and proof of insurance” are routine and permissible parts of an ordinary traffic stop.

This statement is consistent with prior North Carolina case law allowing these checks, and the associated brief delays. State v. Velazquez-Perez, ___ N.C. App. ___, 756 S.E.2d 869, 876 (2014) (finding “no . . . authority” for the defendant’s claim that a document check exceeded the scope of a speeding stop, and noting that “officers routinely check relevant documentation while conducting traffic stops”); State v. Hernandez, 170 N.C. App. 299, 307-08 (2005) (holding that “running checks on Defendant’s license and registration” was “reasonably related to the stop based on the seat belt infraction”); State v. Castellon, 151 N.C. App. 675, 680 (2002) (twenty-five minute “detention for the purpose of determining the validity of defendant’s license was not unreasonable” when officer’s computer was working slowly). See also, e.g., United States v. Villa, 589 F.3d 1334, 1339 (10th Cir. 2009) (“It is well-established that [a] law enforcement officer conducting a routine traffic stop may request a driver's license and vehicle registration, run a computer check, and issue a citation." (citation omitted); See generally Wayne R. LaFave, The "Routine Traffic Stop" From Start to Finish: Too Much "Routine," Not Enough Fourth Amendment, 102 MICH. L. REV. 1843, 1874-85 (2004) (noting that most courts have permitted license, warrant, and record checks incident to traffic stops, though criticizing some of these conclusions) [hereinafter LaFave, "Routine"].

Checks that focus on a motorist's criminal history rather than his or her driving status and the existence of outstanding arrest warrants may be permissible also, though the issue is less clearly settled. The Rodriguez Court briefly suggested that criminal record checks may be permissible as an officer safety measure. ___ U.S. at ___, 135 S. Ct. at 1616 (citing United States v. Holt, 264 F.3d 1215 (10th Cir. 2001) (en banc), for the proposition that running a motorist's criminal record is justified by officer safety). However, the Court did not address the issue in detail and at least one state court has since found one variety of record check to be improperly directed at detecting evidence of ordinary criminal wrongdoing. United States v. Evans, 786 F.3d 779, 787 (9th Cir. 2015) (ruling that an officer improperly extended a traffic stop to conduct an "ex-felon registration check," a procedure that inquired into a subject's criminal history and determined whether he had registered his address with the sheriff as required for certain offenders in the state in which the stop took place).

- E. Questions about Unrelated Matters. The United States Supreme Court held in Muehler v. Mena, 544 U.S. 93, 100-01 (2005), that questioning is not a seizure, so the police may question a person who has been detained about matters unrelated to the justification for the detention, even without any individualized suspicion supporting the questions. Although Muehler involved a person who was detained during the execution of a search warrant, not the subject of a traffic stop, its reasoning applies equally in the traffic stop setting. The Court has recognized as much. Arizona v. Johnson, 555 U.S. 323, 333 (2009) ("An officer's inquiries into matters unrelated to the justification for the traffic stop, this Court has made plain, do not convert the encounter into something other than a lawful seizure, so long as those inquiries do not measurably extend the duration of the stop."). See also e.g., United States v. Olivera-Mendez, 484 F.3d 505, 510-11 (8th Cir. 2007); United States v. Stewart, 473 F.3d 1265, 1268-69 (10th Cir. 2007).

It should be emphasized that the questioning in Muehler did not extend the subject's detention; whether a traffic stop may be prolonged for additional questioning is discussed below.

- F. Use of Drug-Sniffing Dogs. Having a dog sniff a car is not a search and requires no quantum of suspicion. Illinois v. Caballes, 543 U.S. 405, 409-10 (2005). Therefore, a dog sniff is permitted during any traffic stop, so long as the sniff does not extend the stop. Whether a traffic stop may be prolonged for a dog sniff is discussed below.
- G. Asking for Consent to Search. Requests to search made during a traffic stop probably should be analyzed just like any other inquiry about matters unrelated to the purpose of the stop: because such a request is not, in itself, a seizure, it does not implicate the Fourth Amendment unless it extends the duration of the stop. 4 LAFAVE, SEARCH AND SEIZURE § 9.3(e). See also United States v. Turvin, 517

F.3d 1097, 1103-04 (9th Cir. 2008) (because “officers do not need reasonable suspicion to ask questions unrelated to the purpose of an initially lawful stop,” a request for consent to search that did not substantially prolong a traffic stop was permissible).

However, at least one North Carolina Court of Appeals case has stated that “[i]f the officer’s request for consent to search is unrelated to the initial purpose for the stop, then the request must be supported by reasonable articulable suspicion of additional criminal activity.” State v. Parker, 183 N.C. App. 1, 9 (2007). The court’s reasoning appears to have been that such a request inherently involves at least a minimal extension of the stop and is therefore unreasonable.<sup>8</sup> But cf. State v. Jacobs, 162 N.C. App. 251, 258 (2004) (“Defendant argues alternatively that the State failed to establish that Officer Smith had sufficient reasonable suspicion to request defendant’s consent for the search [during an investigative stop]. No such showing is required.”).

- H. Prolonging the Stop to Investigate Unrelated Matters. In Rodriguez v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 135 S. Ct. 1609 (2015), the Supreme Court ruled that an officer could not briefly extend a traffic stop to deploy a drug sniffing dog. The Court reasoned that a stop may not be extended beyond the time necessary to complete the “mission” of the stop, which is “to address the traffic violation that warranted the stop . . . and attend to related safety concerns.” Id. at 1614. That is, “[a]uthority for the seizure ends when tasks tied to the traffic infraction are – or reasonably should have been – completed.” Id. Because a dog sniff is not a task “tied to the traffic infraction,” but rather is “aimed at ‘detect[ing] evidence of ordinary criminal wrongdoing,’” any delay to enable a dog sniff violates the Fourth Amendment. Id. at 1615. The Court rejected the idea, widely endorsed by the lower courts,<sup>9</sup> that “de minimis” delays of just a few minutes did not rise to the level of Fourth Amendment concern. It therefore effectively overruled State v. Sellars, 222 N.C. App. 245 (2012) (delay of four minutes and thirty-seven seconds to allow a dog sniff to take place was de minimis and did not violate the Fourth Amendment), and State v. Brimmer, 187 N.C. App. 451 (2007) (delay of approximately four minutes to allow a dog sniff to take place was de minimis).<sup>10</sup>

<sup>8</sup> This may not be so in some cases, as when one officer asks for consent to search while another is writing a citation. The issue of delays is addressed later in this manuscript.

<sup>9</sup> See, e.g., United States v. Rodriguez, 741 F.3d 905, 907-08 (8th Cir. 2014) (a seven- or eight-minute delay to deploy a drug-sniffing dog was “a de minimis intrusion” that did not implicate the Fourth Amendment), vacated, ___ U.S. ___, 135 S. Ct. 1609 (2015); United States v. Green, 740 F.3d 275, 281 (4th Cir. 2014) (running a “criminal history check added just four minutes to the traffic stop” and “at most, amounted to a de minimis intrusion . . . [that] did not constitute a violation of [the defendant’s] Fourth Amendment rights”); United States v. Mason, 628 F.3d 123, 132 (4th Cir. 2010) (“The one to two of the 11 minutes [that the stop took] devoted to questioning on matters not directly related to the traffic stop constituted only a slight delay that raises no Fourth Amendment concern.”); United States v. Harrison, 606 F.3d 42, 45 (2d Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (five to six minutes of questioning unrelated to the purpose of the traffic stop “did not prolong the stop so as to render it unconstitutional”); Turvin, 517 F.3d 1097, 1101-02 (asking a “few questions” unrelated to the stop that prolonged the stop by a “few moments” was not unreasonable, and collecting cases). See generally United States v. Everett, 601 F.3d 484, 494-95 (6th Cir. 2010) (collecting cases and concluding that whether a delay is de minimis depends on all the circumstances, including whether the officer is diligently moving toward a conclusion of the stop, and the ratio of stop-related questions to non-stop-related questions).

<sup>10</sup> Even before Rodriguez, the North Carolina Court of Appeals had limited Brimmer and Sellars in State v. Cottrell, ___ N.C. App. ___, 760 S.E.2d 274, 282 (2014), where the court stated that it did “not believe

The reasoning of Rodriguez extends beyond dog sniffs. The case clearly implies that an officer may not extend a stop in order to ask questions unrelated to the purpose of the stop, such as questions about drug activity. Lower courts have uniformly understood that implication. See, e.g., United States v. Archuleta, ___ F. App'x ___, 2015 WL 4296639, *7 (10th Cir. July 16, 2015) (unpublished) (citing Rodriguez while ruling that a bicycle stop was improperly prolonged “in order to ask a few additional questions” unrelated to the bicycle law violations that prompted the stop); Amanuel v. Soares, 2015 WL 3523173, *7 (N.D. Cal. June 3, 2015) (unpublished) (extending a traffic stop by 10 minutes to discuss a passenger’s criminal history, ask whether the passenger had been subpoenaed to an upcoming criminal trial, and caution the passenger against perjuring himself, would amount to an improper extension of the stop in violation of Rodriguez); United States v. Kendrick, 2015 WL 2356890, *8 (W.D.N.Y. May 15, 2015) (unpublished) (agreeing that “absent a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity, extending the stop . . . in order to conduct further questioning of the driver and the occupants about matters unrelated to the purpose of the traffic stop would appear to violate the . . . rule announced in Rodriguez,” though finding that reasonable suspicion was present in the case under consideration).<sup>11</sup>

Presumably, Rodriguez also makes it improper for an officer to extend a stop in order to seek consent to search. See United States v. Hight, ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, 2015 WL 4239003, *5 (D. Colo. June 29, 2015) (an officer stopped a truck for a traffic violation, ran standard checks on the driver and spoke briefly with him, and decided that he wanted to ask for consent to search; the officer called for backup and spent at least nine minutes waiting for another officer and working on a consent form; when backup arrived, the officer terminated the stop, then asked for and obtained consent; the court ruled that the nine-minute extension of the stop was improper and that it required suppression even if consent to search was obtained voluntarily after the stop ended). Of course, as noted above, Parker, 183 N.C. App. 1, is also a relevant precedent in this area.

Officers may respond to Rodriguez by multitasking: deploying a drug dog while waiting for a response on a license check, or asking investigative questions of the driver while filling out a citation. Defendants may argue that such multitasking inherently slows an officer down. Whether that is so in a particular case is a factual question. At least in two early cases on point, courts seem to have accepted officers’ multitasking. See, e.g., State v. Jackson, ___ N.E.3d ___, 2015 WL 3824080, *6-7 (Ohio Ct. App. 2015) (a traffic stop conducted by one Trooper was not impermissibly extended when a different Trooper conducted a dog sniff while the first Trooper investigated the defendant’s background and wrote a traffic citation); Lewis v. State, 773 S.E.2d 423, 427 (Ga. Ct. App. 2015) (similar). It may be worth noting that both Jackson and Lewis involved multiple officers, with one handling the dog while the other addressed the traffic violation.

One question that arises from Rodriguez is what sorts of conversation relate to the traffic stop. May an officer engage in brief chit-chat with a motorist, or does such interaction constitute an extension of the stop? What about that the de minimis analysis applied in Brimmer and Sellars should be extended to situations when, as here, a drug dog was not already on the scene.”

<sup>11</sup> Even before Rodriguez, it was risky for an officer to measurably extend a stop to ask questions unrelated to the purpose of the stop in light of State v. Jackson, 199 N.C. App. 236, 243 (2009) (finding that an officer unreasonably extended a traffic stop when she asked just a handful of drug-related questions).

inquiring about a motorist's travel plans, or a passenger's, where such inquiries may bear on the likelihood of driver fatigue but also may be used to seek out inconsistencies that may be evidence of illicit activity? One early case of note is United States v. Iturbe-Gonzalez, ___ F. Supp. 3d ___, 2015 WL 1843046, *6 (D. Mont. April 23, 2015), where the court indicated that an officer may make "traffic safety-related inquiries of a general nature [including about the driver's] travel plans and travel objectives," and said that "any suggestion to the contrary would ask that officers issuing traffic violations temporarily become traffic ticket automatons while processing a traffic violation, as opposed to human beings." Of course, even if Iturbe-Gonzalez is correct that a question or two about travel plans are sufficiently related to the purpose of a traffic stop, a court might take a different view of an officer's extended discussion of itineraries with multiple vehicle occupants.

- I. Total Duration. There is no bright-line rule regarding the length of traffic stops. As a rule of thumb, "routine" stops that exceed twenty minutes may deserve closer scrutiny. See ROBERT L. FARB, ARREST, SEARCH, AND INVESTIGATION IN NORTH CAROLINA 43 (4th ed. 2011). Stops of various lengths have been upheld by the courts. See, e.g., State v. Heien, ___ N.C. App. ___, 741 S.E.2d 1, 6 (2013) (thirteen minutes was "not unduly prolonged"), aff'd per curiam, 367 N.C. 163 (2013), and aff'd on other grounds, ___ U.S. ___, 135 S. Ct. 530 (2014); State v. Castellon, 151 N.C. App. 675, 677-80 (2002) (twenty-five minutes, though some portion of that time may have been after reasonable suspicion developed); United States v. Rivera, 570 F.3d 1009, 1013 (8th Cir. 2009) (seventeen minutes); United States v. Eckhart, 569 F.3d 1263, 1274 (10th Cir. 2009) (twenty-seven minutes); United States v. Muriel, 418 F.3d 720, 725-26 (7th Cir. 2005) (thirteen minutes).

V. Termination of the Stop.

- A. When Termination Takes Place. As a general rule, "an initial traffic stop concludes . . . after an officer returns the detainee's driver's license and registration." Jackson, 199 N.C. App. at 243; State v. Heien, ___ N.C. App. ___, 741 S.E.2d 1, 5 (2013) ("Generally, the return of the driver's license or other documents to those who have been detained indicates the investigatory detention has ended."), aff'd per curiam, 367 N.C. 163 (2013), and aff'd on other grounds, ___ U.S. ___, 135 S. Ct. 530 (2014). When an officer takes other documents from the driver, such as registration and insurance documents, these, too must be returned before the stop ends. State v. Velazquez-Perez, ___ N.C. App. ___, 756 S.E.2d 869, 876 (2014) (even though an officer had returned a driver's license and issued a warning citation, "[t]he purpose of the stop was not completed until [the officer] finished a proper document check [of registration, insurance, and other documents the officer had taken] and returned the documents"). As the Fourth Circuit explains, when an officer returns a driver's documents, it "indicate[s] that all business with [the driver is] completed and that he [is] free to leave." United States v. Lattimore, 87 F.3d 647, 653 (4th Cir. 1996).

This rule is not absolute and specific circumstances may dictate a different result. The North Carolina Court of Appeals has held, in at least one case, that under the totality of the circumstances, the occupants of a vehicle remained seized even after the return of the driver's paperwork, in part because the officer "never told [the driver] he was free to leave." State v. Myles, 188 N.C. App. 42, 46 (2008), aff'd per curiam, 362 N.C. 344 (2008). See also State v.

Kincaid, 147 N.C. App. 94, 99 (2001) (suggesting that the return of a driver's license and registration is a necessary, but not invariably a sufficient, condition for the termination of a stop).

Some commentators have argued that many motorists will not feel free to depart until they are expressly permitted to do so. LaFave, "Routine" at 1899-1902. Certainly many officers mark the end of a stop by saying "you're free to go" or "you can be on your way" or something similar. Nonetheless, the United States Supreme Court has rejected the idea that drivers must expressly be told that they are free to go before a stop terminates. Ohio v. Robinette, 519 U.S. 33, 39-40 (1996) (adopting a totality of the circumstances approach).

- B. Effect of Termination. Once a stop has ended, the driver and any other occupants of the vehicle may depart. Any further interaction between the officer and the occupants of the vehicle is, therefore, consensual. The officer may ask questions about any subject at all, at any length; may request consent to search; and so on. In other words, the "time and scope limitations" that apply to a traffic stop cease to be relevant. LaFave, "Routine" at 1898.
